 PLUMIPED. n. f. [pluma and pes, Lat.] A fowl that has feathers on the foot.
 PLUMMET. n. f. [from plumb.]
 1. A weight of lead hung at a string, by which depths are sounded, and perpendicularity is discerned.
 Deeper than did ever plummet found,
 I'll drown my book. Shakespeare, Tempest.
 Fly envious time
 Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours,
 Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace. Milton.
 2. Any weight.
 God sees the body of flesh which you bear about you, and the plummet which it hangs upon your soul, and therefore, when you cannot rise high enough to him, he comes down to you.
 The heaviness of these bodies, being always in the ascending side of the wheel, must be counterpoised by a plummet fastened about the pulley on the axis: this plummet will descend according as the hand doth make the several parts of the wheel lighter or heavier. Wilkins.
 PLUMOSITY. n. f. [from plumosus.] The state of having feathers.
 PLUMOUS. adj. [plumosus, Fr. plumosus, Lat.] Feathery; resembling feathers.
 This has a like plumous body in the middle, but finer. Woodward on Fossils.
 PLUMP. adj. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Skinner derives it from pemelle, Fr. full like a ripe apple; it might be more easily deduced from plum, which yet seems very harsh. Junius omits it.] Somewhat fat; not lean; sleek; full and smooth.
 The heifer, that valued itself upon a smooth coat and a plump habit of body, was taken up for a sacrifice; but the ox, that was despised for his raw bones, went on with his work still. L'Estrange.
 Plump gentleman,
 Get out as fast as e'er you can;
 Or cease to puff, or to exclaim,
 You make the very crowd you blame. Prior.
 The famish'd cow
 Grows plump and round, and full of mettle. Swift.
 PLUMP. n. f. [from the adjective.] A knot; a tuft; a cluster; a number joined in one mass.
